Dear Colleagues,

For the fifth time, we invite you to participate in the FACES OF WAR conference, which this time will focus on the topic of CITY AND WAR. Over the centuries, cities have repeatedly played a key role in the context of warfare. Disputes about them were a source of conflict, they were the strategic goal of operations, armed conflict took place in them. No less an important role was played by them as bases of military units and institutions, and centres of production and supply for the army. It should also be noted that it was the inhabitants of cities who often shouldered the burden of wars, whether by participating in them or supporting the army. It was also cities and their populations who were most severely affected by the effects of conflicts. All this makes cities a very interesting topic for consideration as a subject for a conference, in which we heartily invite you to participate.

Suggested topics

- the city as a place where troops are stationed
- urban fortifications
- the city as an army supply base
- fighting in the city and for the city
- participation of city residents in wars
- city life during wars
- war damage in cities

As always, we are open for your suggestions of topics that may go beyond the issues suggested above, providing they remain connected with the military history of cities. Traditionally, at our conference we do not set any chronological limit, and we encourage submission of proposals for papers covering any period from antiquity to the present day, from representatives of various scientific disciplines, both from those holding academic titles and those at the beginnings of their career. The deadline for sending abstracts (200 words) is February 15, 2020. Abstracts will be published on conference website. The organizers reserve the right to turn down proposals submitted.
